In this article, we explain in detail how to watch your local broadcast network by streaming them live online or viewing [Continued Reading] by Todd Bowerman With hundreds of channels and thousands of hours of programming, TV presents an immense challenge for parents. Preventing children watching programming isn't appropriate may feel like a Herculean challenge, but cable providers, television manufacturers, and internet streaming services have done what they can make the process a little easier. Parents have several options available to deal with tv channels, to ensure they are not seen without supervision. Most modern TV features built-in support for the V-chip, a special device that reads the rating of specific programs and controls if they may appear. All TV programs are assigned an assessment; for example, a TV-MA program is considered for adults only, while a TV-G program is considered suitable for most audiences. If your TV has V-chip support, you can use its parental control or Settings menu to prohibit the display of programs based on their assessment. Adults can still see these programs with an access code, but children will not be able to watch them on any channel. Cable companies also include options for controlling which channels can and cannot be displayed. Comcast, for example, includes a Parental Control option on its DVRs and set-top boxes that allow parents to block channels, as well as movies and TV shows based on their ratings. Time Alerts and DirecTV offer similar options. Check to monitor parents in your cable's main menu or contact your cable provider for help with specific channel steps blocked for your hardware. Many TV programs and channels are available on the internet. Comedy Central, Adult Drawing Network-oriented Adult Swim, Fox, and many other networks have streaming options available either on their own websites or on sites such as Hulu. If you want to protect your kids from certain TV content, you'll need to add a layer of protection to your computer. Parental control software for your PC or Mac will allow you to control which sites your child can and cannot visit, in addition to controlling the media they can view on the internet. Television has changed dramatically with the advantage of streaming services, such as Hulu and Netflix. If your television supports the installation of apps, you'll need to take the steps to employ parental control for these apps. Netflix, for example, has a wide library of content that parents can find appropriate for children; parents must allow Netflix's parental control to ensure there isn't a loop of protection. the best action is to supervise children closely and handle blocking programs and channels as the need arises.
